SELECT STORY.

AN ENGLISH CINDERELLA.

There are more Cinderellas now-a-days than the world imagines. The old story is enacted under different circumstances, with varying details, in many an English household. The daughters of the land may be fair, but there are too many of them, perhaps, for the anxious manœuvring mother to pilot among the shoals and quicksands of society. Now and then a younger one is kept out in the cold for a little; forbidden to cross the borderland between the school room and the drawing room—not exactly forced to sit in ashes, but repressed, hidden away in the dim background. There may be reason, plenty of wordly wisdom in this, and yet the girl woman is apt to wax rebellious; her sisters' triumphs fill her with envy. All sorts of visions of possible and impossible delights seem to beckon to her from that unknown world. Why must she, poor little Cinderella, waste her sweet bloom unseen and unheeded!

One fears Mabel Templeton had some such thoughts as these as she washed half sadly, half enviously, the progress of her sisters' toilets one bright June afternoon, and also the packing of two well-filled trunks, into each of which Rosalie was depositing a perfectly new and dainty ball dress. For Mr. Templeton had consented to take his two elder daughters to Oxford for the Commemoration, and though there was no mother in this case, Aunt Selina, who was also one of the party, had flatly refused to act as chaperon to more than two nieces at a time.

"Disagreeable old thing!" muttered Cinderella, with a curl of her pretty lips. She was trying to brave out her disappointment in this fashion, but tears lay very near the surface, for the poor girl's heart was very sore. "It is such a shame, too, when Owen is my own brother, and I have never seen his rooms, or his cap and gown; and papa took you both last year.

"Yes, but it was not Commemoration time; everything was as slow and stupid as possible," returned Violet placidly. "Don't be cross, Mab; neither Pauline nor I can help Aunt Selina's fads. You know papa does not like us to cross her, because she is so rich. It was not possible for me to put in a word."

She spoke in a tone of good-natured banter, and patted her young sister's shoulder kindly as she passed.

"Don't, Vi!" returned Mab, rather irritably. "It is all very well, your saying that about Aunt Selina, but you know that neither you nor Pauline said one word—you never even mentioned me. And yet Owen begged so hard that I should go this year."

"Oh, Mab! how tiresome you are!" observed Pauline, as Mab paused in her indignant speech. All the Templeton girls were handsome; but though Pauline was very fair and stately, one or two old friends of the family had predicted that Mab would one day bear the palm. "I wish you would not provoke me into saying it, but I must own that I think Aunt is quite right, and three would be too many. It is our turn this year, but next Commemoration, who knows?" And here she stopped to survey herself in the glass.

Mabel gave a little stamp with her foot, but she had a sweet nature on the whole, and she wisely resolved not to give vent to the feelings that oppressed her.

Mab had her own little secret, though she was only eighteen, and neither Pauline nor Violet would allow that she was quite grown up. Why it was only this week that the governess had been dismissed. And she was quite right in her surmise that neither of her sisters wished to include her in their party. It is difficult for a girl to be perfectly honest on all occasions. Mab was shrdly telling the truth, that is the whole truth, when she alleged her fondness for Owen and her desire to see him in his undergraduate garb, as her reason for wishing to go to Oxford. Owen was certainly very dear to her, but it may be doubted if some one were not becoming dearer still.

Last vacation Owen had brought a friend home with him, and the two had been a great deal in the school room, where Mab still did some pretence of lessons with Miss Dalton. Nevertheless, her demure manners in the drawing room of an evening were as grown up as Pauline's could be.

What would Mr. Beauchamp think when he saw only Violet and Pauline? And yet he had begged her so earnestly to come down for a week.

"You will be out, then," he had said quite eagerly. "Miss Dalton tells me she is to leave in June. I shall look for you and you must give me your first dance at the University ball. I will dance with no one else until you appear. Do not disappoint me. I shall know what to think if I see you. It will show you care a little for my wishes, in spite of all your teasing—for you have teased me sadly, have you not, Miss Mab?"

But to this Mabel made no sort of rejoinder, except by that blush.

She sat and thought about it all when the carriage had taken them at last to the station, and she was left alone in the sunny, deserted drawing room. Miss Dalton was gone, all the lesson books were put away, she was a grown-up young lady, as she said. At the present moment she was mistress of that great house and had a half dozen servants at her command. And yet, in spite of all this freedom and grandeur, no Cinderella sitting among the ashes could have felt more forlorn or miserable.

Owen, dear old fellow, would be bitterly disappointed, for Mab was his special sister, but, as he would be coming back with them, such disappointment would be borne. But what would Mr. Beauchamp think when he saw only her sisters? That she had not cared to come—that his wishes were nothing to her—that she meant only teasing and fun and nothing else. And all that after all his kindness to her, "the little Faarie Queene," as he had once called her at a Christmas party.

"Oh, it is too hard! It is bitterly hard!" sobbed the poor child. "And I should not have minded—I should not be half so miserable if I had not teased him so much and made him look sad," finished Mab, in a little outburst of despair.

And any one who knew Ned Beauchamp's character would have believed she had cause for her fears.

"If she does not come I shall know what to think," he had said to himself rather bitterly when she had Lidden him a laughing good-by. But in all this he wronged her, for Mab was as true and faithful a little soul as ever breathed.

Mabel thought her ill-luck had reached its climax when her Uncle Powell was announced.

None of the girls cared for their Uncle Powell's visits. He was not excessively rich, like their Aunt Selina, from whom they had goodly expectations, so no one expected them to keep him in a good humor; and, though he was Mr. Templeton's half-brother, no two men could be more unlike. He was a small, wiry man, with a precise, methodical voice, and a manner that was somewhat dry and caustic, and which did not inspire his young relations with much affection, though they certainly had no reason to dislike him, for he was good to them in his own way and according to his lights. Like many other elderly people his heart was a great deal softer than his words.

He looked at Mab rather sharply as he entered—the little girl's red eyes and pale cheeks did not escape him—but he asked no questions, leaving Mab to explain rather lamely the reason for her solitude.

"So they have left you all alone," he remarked curtly. "That is rather dull at your age, eh? Do you mean to allow yourself any dinner, Miss Housekeeper, and do you think you could spare me a little?—for I have been about town all day, and am almost famished."

Mab replied, a little reluctantly, that she would go and see. Oh, yes, she was sure there was enough for both—Pauline was never stingy in her menage. But, as she accomplished her errand, her conscience pricked her for want of ready hospitality.

What if she were unhappy—other people must have their dinners. Uncle Powell was an old man—old, very old, quite 55, and he looked tired—and, in spite of Violet's sarcasms about his old-fashioned whiskers and the ridiculous cut of his waistcoats, he had always been kind to her, bringing her little presents and showing her little attentions. He would do it rather awkwardly, and his voice would be a little gruff; but, after all, it is not every one who has a pleasant manner.

These reflections were so salutary that Mab tripped up stairs, bathed her aching head with eau-de-cologne, put on her fresh white gown, though she had only an old uncle for her vis-a vis, and putting away her sad thoughts with a brave effort, set herself to entertain the unwelcome guest.

Now, the dinner was very good, and Mr. Templeton's claret was excellent, and Mab made the prettiest little hostess possible, in spite of those telltale traces on her eyelids; and, as the soft, childish eyelids raised themselves to his face with that pathetic, pained look in them, something seemed to tug at Uncle Powell's heart strings.

"You are not quite happy, my dear little girl?" he said at last, in the kindest possible voice. "Tell me all about it, Mab."

And then with some difficulty he drew the whole story from her; only of course, the Beauchamp part was suppressed, for there are some things that cannot be told even to the kindest uncle.

"Humph! just like your Aunt Selina! A selfish, wordly woman—as I always told Ralph. And pray what harm would it have done her to have taken you as well? I'll be bound Pauline and Violet backed her up in her selfishness—girls are so inconsiderate. I hate such stuck up doings."

Mab began to cry.

"Never mind, Mab! You shall not spoil your pretty eyes while you have your uncle to protect you. You have been a good girl this evening, and you shall not lose your treat. We will do them finely, Mab and Owen shall help us. They are at the Randolph, you say? Very well, I will telegraph for rooms at the Mitre. You just go and pack up the fineries, and we will go down by the same train to-morrow.

"Uncle!—oh, Uncle!" Mab could hardly bring out the exclamation, she was so breathless. "Oh, Uncle! what do you mean?"

"I mean just what I say and say what I mean. And I will come and fetch you to-morrow, as sure as my name is Anthony Powell."

"But, Uncle," stammered poor Mab, flushing and paling by turns, "Papa and Pauline—what will they say when they see me? Pauline will be so angry, and Violet will laugh and be sarcastic."

"Let them laugh," returned Uncle Powell, shortly. "Bless me, Mab—a little testily—"I suppose I may give my niece a treat if I like. Your father and I will make that all right, so the women need not interfere. If Pauline speaks to me I shall tell her my mind pretty plainly, so put all this nousense out of your head. I want to see Oxford and so do you, so we will just have our little trip together."

Mab's only answer for this was to throw her arms around his neck and kiss him, as certainly she had never kissed him in her life. Perhaps Mab's cheek was a little wet. Uncle Powell cleared his throat rather huskily after that, and he even stroked her hair as he bade her good-night.

It was a radiant Mab who was watching for Uncle Powell next morning, as he drove up with his portmanteau.

But she grew more sober when they reached their destination. As no one expected them, there was no one, of course, to meet them at the station. Mab, who was yearning for a sight of Owen's bright boyish face, felt unreasonably damped at this. And there was a farther disappointment in store for her, for when after luncheon they went straight to Magdalen in search of him, the young undergraduate's rooms were empty.

"Oh, I forgot," exclaimed Mab, with a sad droop of her lip; "it is the flower show at Worcester and of course he has taken them there."

And then she said, with an effort, but very sweetly.

"Never mind dear uncle, we shall find Owen by and by; and I am glad to see his rooms. How pretty and cosy he has made them! The scout says he is expecting some people to tea. Do you think," rather timidly, "that we might walk about a little, and come back later on?"

And as Uncle Powell pronounced this an excellent idea they sauntered out together.

The Templetons girls were not enjoying themselves this afternoon. In the first it was rather hot and Aunt Selina was tired. Then Owen was in one of his sulky moods, and had not offered to introduce any of his friends. He had turned rusty from the moment he had met them at the station and found Mab was not with them.

"What a shame, leaving that poor little thing alone at home," he had blurted out. "I call that confoundedly hard of you women."

"Hush! Aunt Selina will hear you," remonstrated Violet.

"I don't care who hears me. That is so like you girls. You are always putting on Mab, just because you know you cannot, either of you, hold a candle to her!" Which was rude, to say the least of it, but then brothers will be rude sometimes, in spite of Oxford training.

To add to their discomfiture, Ned Beauchamp had come up to them a little eagerly, and had at once questioned them about Mab.

"I don't see your sister, but she is, here of course," trying to speak as if the questions were of no moment to him, but flushing over his own words like a girl; but Pauline, who was too self-absorbed to be observant returned, quite carelessly:

"Mab is at home; there was no thought of her coming. What a curious orchid, Mr. Beauchamp; I have never seen one like that before."

Ned Beauchamp looked at the orchid and said a civil word or two, and then detached himself from the party with a muttered excuse; he had only just come to show himself; it was awfully hot; he must go back and work.

"Hellos! why is Ned Beauchamp taking himself off?" exclaimed Mr. Templeton in surprise as he joined his eldest daughter.

"I don't know, papa; he seems to be a little odd and bearish to-day. He used to be pleasant enough when he stayed at Portchester Terrace; but young men will give themselves airs sometimes."

"And so will young ladies, my dear," returned her father, rather maliciously. "Well, well, young people must manage their own affairs. Anyhow Ned Beauchamp is a capital fellow, and worth a little trouble. Why, he has fifteen hundred a year of his own now, and when his uncle dies he will have as much again. So you and Violet had better do your best," continued Mr. Templeton, with the heavy raillery with which certain men of a coarse calibre love to indulge.

When Ned Beauchamp had made that excuse about his work he had lost himself at once among a crowd near the entrance gate. Flowers were all very well, but he had no longer any heart for them. Mab had played him false.

People looked after the tall, broad-shouldered young fellow, with his handsome, moody face, and many would have greeted him, but he looked neither to the right nor left. A sweet, girlish face had bewitched him. She had promised to come—at least if silence gives consent—and now she had played him false; his wishes were nothing to her; he had told her he should know what to think. Well, he knew what to think now!

He had reached Magdalen Cloisters by this time, but the thought of work odious to him, so he turned into the shadowy coolness of Addison's walk.

It had never looked so deliciously inviting as it did this afternoon. Every where green leaves, bird music, sparkles of sunlight, and the clear summer blue of heaven above all.

The walk seemed strangely empty this afternoon. Ned had only passed one person—a thick set, gray-haired man, who was poking his stick among the periwinkles and took no notice of him. A little farther on there was a bench, with a girl sitting on it in a gray dress and a hat with daffodils; but Ned was in no mood for curiosity, so he never turned his head. Only as he passed the girl started up and called to him in an eager voice.

"Oh, please stop, Mr. Beauchamp! We want to know where Owen is. And—and—I beg pardon for startling you so, but you need not have passed me."

Mab was stammering sadly in her confusion, but it was the sudden look of joy in Ned's eyes that made her trip over her words. And why had he caught hold of her hands in that quick, excited way?

"Oh, Mab, is it really you? And why did your sister say you had not come? I thought you had played me false. I thought—oh! I cannot tell you how mad and unhappy I felt—and you were here all the time, my darling!"

Well, it was good of Uncle Powell to stand with his back to them so long, feeling the periwinkles leaves, when they had so much to tell each other. Mab cried again a little as she poured her story into Ned's ear—her despair when they had driven away and left her—her sorrow at having teased him—her terror lest he should have misconstrued her absence—the beneficient comforter in the person of Uncle Powell.

"Never mind, my Faerie Queene," Ned had said, comforting her. "I should soon have learned the truth, for I had just made up my mind to ask for leave and run up to Portchester Terrace. I know it would not have been right in your father's absence, but I could not have rested without hearing from your own lips why you had not come. You would not have been long unhappy, but now it is much better as it is. But here comes your uncle, and I must thank him for bringing you, and then we must go in search of Owen."

There was a weary and somewhat silent little party in Owen's rooms. Mr. Temple was yawning visibly, and Aun

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 1886.

Col. M. S. Quay assumed the office of State Treasurer on Monday. Ex-Treasurer Livsey will be made his chief clerk.

Secretary Manning has so far recovered from his sickness as to be able to take a drive on Sunday last and to receive callers.

Prof Brooks, of the Red Home Observatory, Phelps, N. Y., discovered a comet on Saturday last. The head resembles a bright star and the tail is conspicuous, the first in Caseopia and the second in Pegosus.

Hugh Conner, aged 50 years, engineer on the steamer, Wilkes-Barre, plying between Nanticoke and Wilkes-Barre, was found dead at his post Sunday afternoon. At the time of death he was in the act of putting coal on the fire. Heart disease was the cause of his death.

The House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have istructed Representative Dockery to report favorably a bill to extend a free delivery system to all towns containing 10,000 inhabitants whose gross postal revenues for preceding year were $10,000 or more.

The Great Strike.

On Saturday last, May 1st was inaugurated one of the greatest strikes ever known. The general purpose of the strike is to establish a system of working but eight hours a day. In some places the demand is for eight hours work at ten hours pay, while in others it is for a reduction of time and wages accordingly. The following is a summary of the movement.

In the anthracite coal fields of the Eastern portion of Pennsylvania there are now 35,000 miners demanding the eight-hour day and threatening a strike if they are denied. The strike would be inaugurated at once if the men of the lower districts were confident of the co-operation of those of the Luzerne and Lackawanna fields, who are not yet ready to make a stand. In the Mahoning Valley 3000 miners are likely to go out.

In Philadelphia 1000 garment cutters inaugurated a strike for eight hours, which will affect from 10,000 to 15,000 other operatives who depend upon the cutters for work. The carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, tin roofers, sheet-iron workers, plumbers and stonemasons have compromised on nine hours. Of the German cabinet makers, all but the employees of nine manufacturers have been granted the eight-hour day, and the 400 cabinet makers and 300 other hands employed by the nine manufacturers who refuse the concession will probably strike. In Camden, N. J., the carpenters, bricklayers and laborers demand eight hours work and ten hours' pay.

In Pittsburg 600 furniture workers and 1200 carpenters strike for ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. The stone-cutters are already out for ten hours' pay and eight hours' work, and the brass-workers will rest content with a Saturday half-holiday.

Chicago at present has a greater number of idle men than any other one city. The strikers there probably number 40,000. They are principally freight handlers employed by the several railroads entering Chicago, lumbermen to the number of 12,000 and the employees of the great packing houses of the Union Stock Yards. Of this vast army nearly all are demanding the eight-hour day, and some also ask an increase of wages. Idividual employers in various trades, it is estimated have already granted the reduction of hours to 5000 employees.

In St. Louis the furniture manufacturers have organized and resolved to operate all factories hereafter on the eight-hour plan. Those who have already struck for the same concession are 200 plumbers and 200 employees of the East St. Louis Water-works. The operatives at the planing mills promise to strike. In some of the tobacco factories the concession is granted.

Milwaukee has between 9000 and 10,000 unemployed workmen. Of these 3000 are brewers, 3000 are shop tailors, 1200 cabinet makers and carpenters, 600 coal-yard hands, 500 cigar makers, 100 broom-makers, 200 slaughter-house employees and 150 brick-yard men. There are some local issues involved, but the eight-hour demand is paramount in almost every case.

In Boston the carpenters and joiners and the plumbers—5000 men in all—will strike if the eight-hour demand is refused. The brick-layers have comprised on nine hours.

Baltimore has 2000 house-carpenters already in the ranks of the idle army, while the 1000 brick-layers have accepted nine hours' work for ten hours' pay; the hod-carriers and stone-masons are satisfied with nine hours and the cigar makers, roofers and furniture makers are still agitated for the coveted reduction.

In Cincinnati 500 employees in furniture factories and 100 men in the Brunswick & Balke Billiard Table Company are out; in Rochester, N. Y., the cigar makers have already begun work on the eight-hour plan; in Washington building operations will be practically suspended; in Troy, N. Y., 300 Italian railroad laborers are on a strike for higher wages; in Louisville, Ky., all furniture factories will shut down unless the men accept eight hours' pay for eight hours' work, and in Detroit, Mich., nearly all the brewery employees are out, but the carpenters have compromised on nine hours' work and ten hours' pay.

Bradstreet's of Saturday gives the epitome of the situation:

One hundred and five thousand men will strike, 80,000 for eight hours and 20,000 for nine hours; 6000 men are now on a strike for eight hours, and eight hours have been granted to 32,000 employees at various points. There are, additionally, 75,000 men who have asked for the eight-hour rule, but who have not stated that they will strike. At leading centres alone it is probable that over 225,000 industrial employees are actively interested in the movement.

These figures are probably as nearly correct as can now be furnished, except that the number of men who may fairly be said to have actually gone on strike is much greater than 6000, the majority of them having inaugurated the movement on Saturday at an hour too late to be covered by Bradstreet's estimate.

RIOT IN CHICAGO.

On Monday afternoon about twelve thousand strikers stretched themselves on the grass near Clark Brothers huge planing mill at Chicago. Nearly all were foreigners.

At 2 o'clock a man, coatless and hatless, climbed upon an empty freight car standing near the multitude. He stepped to the edge of the roof, and then waved his hands about his head.

"Stand firm!" he shouted in German. "Let every man stand shoulder to shoulder, and we will win this fight. We must have our rights. Strike while the iron is hot. Drive the scabs out of the yards, and let us show McCormick that he cannot hire non-union men and keep them at work while we, the bone and sinew of Chicago, are forced to hear our wives and our children crying for bread. Arm yourselves and prepare for the worst."

Deafening cheers greeted each sentence of the speaker's harangue. The thousands surged nearer the car upon which the hatless man stood and detached it from the train.

A youth in a hickory shirt hurled a stone at one of the proprietors of the Hingdington planing mill who had thrust his head out of the window to learn the cause of the rumpus.

The multitude had no other signal. Within three seconds a thousand men burst into the yard of the company and swarmed around the building from which the head had protruded. A storm of stones and brickbats fell upon the roof, and the windows were demolished as though by an earthquake.

After this work of destruction the mob returned to the car, and listened to a young and fiery editor of the Anarchists organ. While he was delivering a virulent attack upon capitalists, the tolling of the bell in the distant tower of the McCormick Reaper Works broke upon the ears of the 12,000 men.

"Now for the scabs!" shouted a man with a red handkerchief knotted about his neck. "Let's drive 'em out of the building and kill 'em!" roared a broad breasted moulder, as he took after the heels of the man with the red handkerchief. The excitement was electric. It spread from man to man in the twinkling of a star. There were cheers from a thousand throats, and then the noise grew into a mighty roar. "On to McCormick's!" was the cry.

At 3½ the mob spread over a large grass plot in front of the McCormick works. Officer West who was on duty at the big gate, warned the invaders to leave. He faced the howling screaming horde and placed his hand upon the handle of the revolver in his hip pocket. Before he had time to draw the weapon a thousand stones filled the air and fell about him like hail. They crashed against the high board fence behind him with terrible noise, and sang a warning as they sped past his helmeted head. The storm was too hot for the officer, and he made his escape amid the flying missels.

Emboldened by the flight of the officer, the strikers surged up against the walls of the factory.

"Kill the scabs!" roared one of the leaders, as he hurled a boulder through one of the windows where a second before a pale face had been pressed.

"Tear down the building!" shouted another, who was waving a huge club in his hand. Almost instantly the great factory was subjected to an ominous siege. Stones crashed through the windows, and clubs carried away the sash. Nothing escaped the fury of the mob. When the windows of the first three stories had been demolished the storm swept through the gaping orifices.

The mob poured forward and were about to enter the yard when a wagon with twelve officers appeared. The dozen officers stepped toward the 20,000 angry people before them. Each carried a revolver in his right hand. The mob remained firm.

"Disperse or we will fire!" shouted Sergeant Enright.

His reply was a shower of stones that whistled unpleasantly about the little band of blues. The officers wavered for a moment before the onslaught, and then levelled their revolvers at the crowd. The barrels of the weapons glistened in the sunlight. There was a flash, and then an explosion followed that startled the horses in the car barn two blocks away. The first shot of the strike had been fired, but nobody was hurt. The bullets flew over the heads of the strikers and buried themselves in the prairie to the northward. Another volley was fired by the officers with the same effect. The strikers contested every inch of ground until the officers reached the sidewalk, where they retreated to the roadway. There they made a stand and hurled stones and clubs at their antagonists. In this fusillade Officer Tom Condon was hit in the back with a brick. Enraged at the misfortune of their comrade, the officers fell upon the mob with revolver and club.

More officers were soon armed and the strikers driven away.

During the riot five strikers were shot, two fatally, four officers were slightly injured, and the Assistant Superintendent of the McCormick works was hit with a stone in the face and badly hurt.

RIOT AT MILWAUKEE.

About 1500 trades unions men, mostly Poles, made an attack on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway company's shop and drove all of the men out of the works. They next started for the St. Paul freight office. Balked in this they went to the machine shops of E. P. Allar & Co. and made a determined attack on the doors, which were barred. Clubs and stones were used. A stream of water dispersed them for a minute, but they made a second rush, and a few succeeded in gaining an entrance, but were driven back by the employees. The mob then retired before the attack of a squad of police and then began to assail the works and police with stones. The police made a charge and captured five of the leaders, but they were all rescued by their comrades, except one who was laid out by a blow from a policeman and afterward locked up. The situation was getting serious when the Central Station wagon dashed down with reentorcements. The mob then retreated sullenly, and finally disappeared southward.

QUIET AT CHICAGO.

On Tuesday the McCormick works at Chicago, were started with about one-half the force of workmen, and did not meet with any disturbance.

STRIKE AT ST. LOUIS SETTLED.

ST. LOUIS, May 4.—The following correspondence tells the tale whereby the strike was declared off:

ST. LOUIS, May 1, 1885.—TO THE GENERAL EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR OF AMERICA: The testimony taken to-day by the Congressional Investigating Committee shows conclusively that very serious losses to the company, agricultural, and other interests of the entire country have resulted from the labor troubles upon the lines of the railroads belonging to the Southwestern system and other railroads in the State of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, and that by reason of said trouble a large number of persons not directly connected therewith have been thrown out of employment. Unwilling at this time to express any opinion in regard to the causes which produce this lamentable condition of affairs, or to indicate where the blame lies for its continuance, and animated solely by a desire to render all the assistance in our power in the endeavor to restore peace, individual happiness and commercial prosperity to the citizens of the country, and particularly of the five States named, we do hereby respectfully but earnestly request you, as American citizens having the welfare of our common country at heart, to advise through the proper official channels a discontinuance of the strike upon the railways hereinbefore mentioned, and to leave the question whether the employes or the officers of the corporation were justifiable to the decision that public opinion may form when the Congressional Committee which has that matter under investigation shall have completed its work Feeling assured that a compliance with the request will merit for your Board and for those who may act in conformity with your counsel the approbation of the people of the United States, We remain your obedient servants.

A. G. CURTIN, A. X. PARKER,
W. H. CRAIN, JAMES BUCHANAN,
J. W. STEWART, JAS. H. OUTHWAITHE.

The following reply was sent yesterday:

HURDE'S HOTEL, ST. LOUIS, MO., May 3, 1886.—To Hons. A. G. Curtin, W. H. Crain, James H. Outwait, A. X. Parker, James Buchanan and J. F. Stewart. Gentlemen: Your communication of May 1, was placed before the joint Executive Boards and the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the communication from the Congressional Committee be placed on file and the request be granted—the time for calling the strike off to be left to the General Executive Board.

In view of the fact that the business interests of the country are suffering, and the Knight of Labor having the whole interests of the people at heart, they willingly comply with the request of the nation's representatives and that of the Citizens Committee of St. Louis, and declare this strike at an end, to take effect on Tuesday morning, May 4, 1886. Trusting that this action may meet with the approval of the public, and assist in bringing capital and labor in closer relationship, we remain very truly yours.

The General Executive Board of the Knight of Labor. JOHN W. HAYES.

Miss Folsolm's Grandfather.

Colonel John B. Folsom, of Folsomdale, grandfather of Miss Frances Folsom, the alleged bride-elect of President Cleveland, lives two miles from Alden, N. Y. in an old fashioned tavern-like house, with a front porch upheld by great wooden pillars. The Colonel is 75 years of age, tall, well built, but afflicted with the gout. He says that it is quite true his granddaughter is to marry President Cleveland. "There is no doubt about the fact of the marriage," said he, "but the intention was to keep it secret until she returned from Europe, where she went partly on the account of the rumor that was current last Summer when she visited Washington."

Speaking of the date of the marriage the Colonel said:

"As to that, I can not be quoted as an authority. The only date I have heard mentioned was Wednesday, June 9, but I feel well satisfied that the plans will all be changed on account of this newspaper talk. The wedding will take place in the White House. I would rather have it occur here, for I could not stand the fatigue of a journey to Washington; but that seems to be out of the question. Frankie wanted to have the wedding take place in the White House, and I would prefer that she should have her own way about it."

Asked as to the payment of the traveling expenses of Mrs. and Miss Folsom, the Colonel blurted out:

"Who do you suppose is paying them? Do you think that John Folsom would let his granddaughter go abroad at somebody else's expense? Why, sir, I sent her a check for $1000 in my last letter to her and I'm prepared to send all the money she wants. Before she left I told her she could get her trousseau, as you call it, in Paris or anywhere else she wanted to, and I gave her a good sum of money. The only condition that I imposed was that she should get a fine one, and I expect to send her more money to pay for it."

HIS SPEECH AT THE LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONE AT MONTGOMERY.

The Capitol grounds at Montgomery, Alabama, presented an animated scene last Friday. The whole hill top and premises were covered with people gathered to witness the laying of the corner-stone of the Confederate monument, or, as some expressed it, "the official burial of the Confederacy." The skies above were cloudless and pleasant breezes wafted the breath of flowers from the city. The foundation of the monument only was ready, presenting a surface of thirty-five feet square. Near at hand stood the cornerstone, on which, in raised letters, was the inscription: Corner-stone laid by Ex-President Jefferson Davis, April 29, 1886."

Opposite this was a large platform for the speakers. The procession formed in front of the Exchange Hotel. Mr. Davis, his daughter, Ex-Governor Watts and H. C. Tompkins, chairman of the committee of arrangements, were in a carriage drawn by four white horses, each led by a negro in livery. The next carriage contained General and Mrs. Gordon, his daughter and Mrs. Clement Clay and was surrounded by survivors of the Sixth Alabama and other Confederate veterans. The procession was preceded by a cavalry and artillery escort and was further made up of other local military, the uniformed rank Knights of Pythias, Grand Commanders of Knights Templar and Masonic bodies from different parts of the State.

The demonstrations along the route were enthusiastic. The ex-President was, as is usual whenever the people catch sight of him, cheered enthusiastically.

The exercises were opened with a prayer and then Ex-Governor Watts introduced Mr. Davis. The scene as Mr. Davis arose and grasped the hand of his old Attorney General was very affecting. It was some moments before he could proceed, as the cheers were again and again repeated. When there was sufficient quiet Mr. Davis said:

Associated here with so many memories thrilling and tender, I have felt that it were dangerous for me to attempt to speak to you as my heart would prompt me. Not that I am always treasuring up bitterness against anyone, but I am overflowing with love and admiration for our beloved people. [Long applause.] To avoid therefore, anything which might be promoted by the fullness of my heart—for I believe I am case-hardened in that condition of non-citzenship which leaves me very little to fear (appiause)—for the purpose of guarding others rather than myself, I have prepared some notes that I might read which would not contain anything that would be constructive or hurtful. [Voices: "Go on; say what you please. You are in the house of your friends."]

My friends, partners in joy and in sorrow, in trials and in suffering, I have come to join you in the performance of a sacred task, to lay the foundation of a monument at the cradle of the Confederate Government, which shall commemorate the gallant sons of Alabama who died for their country, who gave their lives a free-will offering in defense of the rights of their sires, won in the war of the Revolution and the State sovereignty, freedom and independence which was left as an inheritance to their posterity forever. These rights the compact of union was formed not to destroy, but the better to preserve and perpetuate. Whoso denies this cannot have attentively read the articles of confederation or the Constitution of the United States. The latter was formed and designed the better to effect the purpose of the first.

With a brief reference to the events of the war and a glowing tribute to the valor of General Gordon, the speaker continued:

That we may not be misunderstood by such as are not wilfully blind, it may be proper to state in the foreground that we have no desire to feed the fires of sectional hate, while we do not seek to avoid whatever responsibility attaches to the belief in the rightcousness of our cause and the virtue of those who risked their lives to defend it. [Long applause and cheers.]. Revenge is not the sentiment of a chivalrous people, and the apothegm that forgiveness is more easy to the injured than to those who inflict an injury has never had a more powerful illustration than in the present attitude of the two sections towards one another. When your children's children shall ask what means this monument there will be the enduring answer: "It commemorates the deeds of Alabama's sons who died that you and your descendants should be what your fathers in the war for independence left you."

NOT A REVOLUTION.

Mr. Davis declared that the action of the States in annulling the compact of union, which had been broken on one side, and forming a new confederation, was in no sense a revolution, as sovereigns never rebel and as only sovereigns can form a national league. If the States had not been sovereigns there could not have been a compact of union. [Applause.] That the South did not anticipate, much less desire, war is shown by the absence of preparation for it, as well as by the efforts made to secure a peaceful separation.

He referred also to the prophecies and threats of dissolution which had been heard from the early days of the century. They began at the North, on the question of preserving the balance of power, and culminated during the war of 1812 on the decline of their trade, though the war was waged for the protection of sailors' rights. He graphically portrayed the heroism displayed by the people of the South when in the belief that their constitutional rights were being invaded and when the sad alternative presented itself of fighting for their State or against it, they freely offered their lives in defense of the cause.

Though Alabama, like Niobe, must mourn her children in death, yet is her woe tempered by the halo which surrounds their memory. This monument will rest upon the land for which they died and point upward to the Father who knows the motives as well as the deeds of His children, and at last resting in the land where justice may be rendered which may have been denied them here.

THE DUTY OF THE PRESENT.

In conclusion, permint me to say, though the memory of our glorious past must ever be dear to us, duty points to the present and the future. Alabama having resumed her place in the Union, be it yours to fulfill all the obligations devolving upon all good citizens, seeking to restore the general government to its pristine purity, and as best you may, to promote the welfare and happiness of your common country. [Long applause.]

Governor Watts then turned over the rest of the proceedings to the Grand Lodge of Masons, who were to lay the corner stone according to Masonic rules. The beautiful ritual was literally carried out by Grand Master J. G. Harris, assisted by the other Grand Officers and Masons. A great many things were deposited in the vault. The first was put in by Miss Davis and was the Confederate battle-flag of General W. W. Allen's command, used during the whole war. Mr. Davis deposited some of the articles.

What Baking Powder Shall We Use.

This plain question comes home to every housekeeper. We all desire pure and wholesome food, and this cannot be had with the use of impure or poisonous baking powder. There can be no longer a question that all the cheaper, lower grade of baking powders contain either alum, lime or phosphatic acid. As loth as we may be to admit so much against what may have been some of our household gods, there can be no gainsaying the unanimous testimony of the official chemists. Indeed, analysts seem to find no baking powder entirely free from some one of these objectionable ingredients except the Royal, and that they report as chemically pure. We find some of the baking powders advertised as pure, to contain, under the tests of Profs. Chandler, Habirshaw and others, nearly twelve per cent. of lime, while others are made from alum with no cream of tartar. This, we presume accounts for their lack of leavening power as sometimes complained of by the cook, and for the bitter taste found in the biscuits so frequently complained of by ourselves.

But aside from the inferiority of the work done by these powders, the physiologists assure us that lime and alum taken into the system in such quantities as this are injurious. They are not decomposed by heat nor dissolved in mixing or baking. They go with the bread, therefore, into the stomach, where their physiological effects are indigestion, dyspepsia or worse evils.

The question naturally arises, why do these cheap baking powder makers use these things? Alum is three cents a pound, lime still cheaper, while cream of tartar costs thirty-five or forty. The reasons for the chemical purity of the Royal Baking Powder were recently given in the New York Times in an interesting description of a new method for refining argols, or crude cream of tartar. It seems that it is only under this process that cream of tartar can be freed from the lime natural to it and rendered chemically pure; that the patents and plant for this cost the Royal Baking Powder Company about half a million dollars, and that they maintain exclusive control of the rights.

Prof. McMurtrie, late chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., in the interests of commerce, made an examination of this process and reported upon the results attained in the refined cream of tartar. The following extract from his report would seem to answer the question repeated at the head of this article and which is so frequently propounded by the housekeeper:

"I have examined the cream of tartar used by the Royal Baking Powder Company in the manufacture of their baking powder, and find it to be perfectly pure, and free from lime in any form. The chemical tests to which I have submitted the Royal Baking Powder prove it perfectly healthful, and free from every deleterious substance."

How Folly Begets Folly.

Jefferson Davis couldn't help perpetrating the monumental folly he exhibited in his late Montgomery speeches. He is old and feeble physically and mentally; he has lost an empire and its glittering sceptre that once seemed within his grasp; he has sorrowed for a score of years as the world passed by him in its matchless progress, forgetful of his existence, and when he came to the capital of Alabama, where the dream of his ambition seemed to reap full fruition a quarter of a century ago, how could he be expected to speak for the living present that has advanced beyond even the scope of his dimmed vision?

Mr. Davis spoke foolishly but naturally as the child would babble over the fragments of a lost toy, but he spoke for none but himself. Of the vast multitude that welcomed him, the chief desire was the natural and ever commendable reverence for the dead who had fallen for the South: but they marched and cheered under the flag of the Union and venerated the ex President of the lost cause as a sincere but hopeless, helpless relic of the past that the South remembers in the sacred sentiment of manly men, but has outlived in every manly action that relates to the present.

But the Davis folly has been dignified by a few so called Grand Army men in Albany, who proclaimed a public meeting in the Assembly Chamber on Thursday evening to protest against the foolish and harmless utterances of Davis. They had a small meeting, they had regulation political orations, they declared treason odious, they sung "We'll hang Jeff Davis on a sour apple tree," and then adjourned, only to be forgotten by the earnest, liberalized men of the present. They are the babbling warriors of peace, who, as General Grant well said, "didn't fairly warm up to the war until it was over," and they welcomed the Davis folly to give them excuse for making fools of themselves.

The men who affect at this late day with law, order and obedience to the laws of the Union supreme in every section of the land, to fear the foolish prattle of Jefferson Davis about issues fought out and settled nearly a generation ago, must either be blooming idiots or ill balanced knaves. The people of all parties and sections understand that the war is over; that its issues are settled beyond dispute; that all but Jefferson Davis in the South and here and there a less excusable fool in the North, give no heed to those who prate of the sectional passions which perished long, long ago, and that while North and South honor the equal heroism of their peoples, build monuments to their chieftains and cherish the memory of their dead, they all blow to "Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable."—Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1886.

This is the day that the workingmen of Washington propose that their demand for the eight hour rule shall go into effect. One of them said to me: "This is not a strike. The workman will simply discharge himself and leave rather than work ten hours. He will then be an unemployed workman and not a striker. He will be "locked out" by the employers. What we propose to do," continued he, "is go to work on Monday as usual. We will work eight hours. If the bosses do not choose to employ us at eight hours a day, we will pick up our tools and leave. We will not prevent other men from working, and there will be no disorder and violence, but we will present a solid, unyielding front."

The Secretary of the Treasury, who has been so near to death's door for the past month, is at work again. I do not mean that he is well or at his desk. He is only able to sit up and take a drive occasionally. But he interests himself with affairs at his Department and discusses business questions with such officials as Treasurer Jordan and Assistant Secretary Fairchild. There is no truth in the report that he signified to the President his intention of retiring from office. On the contrary, that he earnestly desires and fully intends to remain at the head of the Treasury which he has so ably directed for the past year. The apprehension of his friends now is that he will undertake to resume his official duties before he is physically able.

I asked a prominent western Representative what he thought of the new Congressional Democratic Campaign Executive Committee. He answered that the selection of Senator Kenna as chairman was a most excellent one. "We had so much faith in the executive ability of Senator Gorman," continued he, "that he was the choice of most of us, but he has enough to do as chairman of the National Executive committee, and declined to serve in this capacity. He will aid us in other ways, however, and Senator Kenna is young, active, vigorous, and capable of doing a great deal of hard work." The West Virginia Senator made his mark first in the House of Representatives, where he worked hard and spoke well. His speech on the currency question was one of the text books of the party during the Congressional campaign of 1878, and he is in sympathy with his party now on nearly every question.

It is not creditable to the Republicans in Congress that it should devolve on a southern member to try to check the waste of public money on pension appropriations. This is a field of reform into which few Congressmen care to venture, and the action of a southern man is particularly liable to misconstruction, in taking the much dreaded step. But the northern men are afraid it would mean the loss of thousands of votes for them at home, and denunciation abroad.

There is scarcely a subject which so tests the courage and conscience of the average Congressmen as that of pension legislation. Every member has his own scheme to advance, and feels that he cannot afford to refuse to help the schemes of his associates. Consequently good and bad schemes are huddled together and nobody has the hardihood to try to assort them. Every Friday evening in its special pension session, the House passes from fifty to a hundred pension bills. Last week, you remember, the Senate passed four hundred in a batch without reading one of them. The Senators sat talking and writing while the farce was going on, apparently oblivious of the fact that the U. S. treasury was not inexhaustible, and that every dollar taken out of it had to be put into it by a tax. The pension business as it is carried on in Congress, is a swindle of the worst sort, and Mr. Tillman of South Carolina is the man who is credited with the intention of exposing it to the country.

The Senators had a little tariff talk a few days ago It was the first chance they had this season of reproducing their views on the protective tariff system, and the occasion was regarded with all the pleasure of a novelty. Senator Beck was making a warm defence of the course of the Postmaster General in his dispute with the Pacific Mail and other steamship companies. He arose with the intention of speaking one hour, but when he touched upon tariff topics he was so constantly interrupted by the Republican Senators that it took him nearly four hours to finish his remarks. He made a bitter denunciation of the policy which forbids an American to purchase a foreign built vessel.

Last Saturday as Deputy Collector Buckingham was returning from Washingtonville to Danville with a livery team hired at the latter place, the horses became frightened at something and started to run away just as they reached the outskirts of Danville. They ran for some distance at headlong speed, and Mr. Buckingham succeeded in stopping them by turning into a bank. Neither horse fell, but when they stopped it was discovered that the ankle of one of them was broken. How it was done is unknown, but it was probably caused by a rut or stepping on a stone. The injury was incurable and the horse had to be shot. Mr. Buckingham says that if the horse had not broken its leg, they would probably have broken his neck.

Charles Coffman was arrested on Friday of last week on charge of assault and battery upon Fred Bowers, on information of Mrs. Bowers. A hearing was held before Esquire Jacoby. We glean the following facts: Chas. Coffman, Fred Bowers and Harve Reymard got in an altercation some where about the Court House. Soon after they all started down the street, indulging in petty wrangles. When they reached a point near Wnary's tinshop where Bowers hit Coffman on the nose and pushed him up against the building. Coffman threatened to use his knife if molested again, and produced a small pen knife. Bowers then threw Coffman in the gutter and with the assistance of Harve Reymard tried to take the knife away. In the scuffle the clothing of Bowers was cut and Reymard received a gash in the leg. After giving all the boys some good advice the justice discharged them. At the time of the affray the police should have arrested them, and let them pay the penalty for such actions.

Licenses.

Considerable time was occupied in Court in the hearing of license applications. There were remonstrances filed against all applicants from Benton. Samuel Hazletine, of Eyersgrove, and Reece Fairman, of Lightstreet. After hearing a number of witnesses Mr. Fairman's application was refused on the ground that no necessity for a second hotel in Lightstreet had been shown.

The application of Lemuel Drake, of Benton, was refused because two of the twelve signers of his petition were not residents of Benton township. A motion was made to allow him to amend by securing two more signers, but this was refused by the Court, saying that as this was a statutory proceeding, the petition must be strictly in compliance with the Act of Assembly when filed, and it is too late to amend now.

Samuel Hazeltine's application was refused after a hearing, because it was shown that he had violated the liquor laws.

Numerous witnesses were called in support of J. B. McHenry's application for a license at Benton. This is a new house, and the best hotel building in the county, outside of the large towns. Nearly all the witnesses called in support of the remonstrance admitted that they were opposed to all licenses. The Court held the case under advisement until Saturday.

The hearing of Hiram Hess' application was postponed until Saturday morning, and decision was reserved in the case of Artur McLaughlin, of Centralia, until the same time.

In passing upon licenses the Court made the following remarks:

The rules of the Court, recommended by a committee from each of the counties in this district and adopted, provide for the filing of remonstrances against licenses, and the Court is always ready to hear any complaints, properly presented, showing that licenses ought not to be granted. Instead of availing themselves of the opportunity given by the rules of Court, some have adopted the plan of writing anonymous communications to the Court setting forth that certain persons ought not to be licensed because of violation of the law. We have received four such communications this term, some of them saying that they dare not let it be known who is making the complaint. There is a degree of cowardice in this that is not all creditable to the writers. If any one knows of violations of the law it is a public duty to make it known in the way provided by law. In this matter the Court receives no assistance from the constables. Though there are remonstrances filed setting forth that in certain sections of the county liquor is sold on Sunday, sold to minors and to habitual drunkards, and that great confusion prevails, every constable has come before us and returned under oath that there are no violations of the liquor laws. We make these remarks now because we have reached the application of Wellington Yeager for a hotel in Locust township. A communication has been received concerning this license, saying that it must not be known who wrote it, and if one-half the allegations are true, this man ought not to be licensed. If there is any one present who knows any reason why Wellington Yeager's application should not be granted, we will hear him now, otherwise this license is granted, as the Court can pay no attention to anonymous communications, if the writer has not the courage to come before the Court and tell what he knows.

ORDER OF THE COURT IN LICENSE CASES.

And now May 5, 1886 ORDERED, that in all cases of application for renewal of a hotel or restaurant license, the applicant may file with his petition, or at any time before or on the hearing, an affidavit setting forth that he had not in the previous year violated, or permitted to be violated, any of the penal provisions of the law in regard to the sale of intoxicating drinks on Sundays, to minors, to habitual drunkards, to persons of known intemperate habits, to persons intoxicated at the time, or on election days.

Such affidavit will be considered as prima facie evidence that no such violations have occurred.

If the applicant shall neglect or refuse to file such an affidavit, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, regard such refusal as conclusive evidence that such violations have occurred, and refuse the license.

Gifts of Poison.

It is time that respectable merchants combined with consumers for the suppression of all gift, prize and lottery schemes in connection with the sale of articles of merchandise. These schemes are not only demoralizing to legitimate business and to the morals of the community, but in the extent in which they are being carried in the sale of articles of food have become a source of great danger to the public health. They are, no matter in what form they appear, nothing more or less than devices to swindle honest and unsuspecting people.

It is gratifying to learn that in some instances the officers of the law have taken hold of the matter. In New York, and also in Chicago, parties who in this way offered gifts to purchasers of their packages have recently been arrested upon indictments for lottery swindling. The latest candidates, both for public execration and criminal prosecution, are the manufacturers of the alum baking powders, who are both by means of gifts and lottery tickets, disposing of large quantities of their corrosively poisonous compounds, which are so well known to be detrimental to health that no housekeeper will admit them to her kitchen, knowingly. This form of swindle is not only being peddled from house to house, but under the promise of large profits to be realized, the manufacturers are entrenching themselves behind the counters of many grocers by getting them to offer the alum goods with the gifts of lottery tickets attached, thereby shifting the liability to prosecution, in part, upon other and, perhaps, innocent parties. Every grocer or dealer, for instance, who sells or offers for sale any of the prize or lottery baking powders is a criminal in the eye of the law, and liable, upon conviction, to fine and imprisonment, while those who sell the gift goods are, morally, as responsible, for they are offering an inducement, or prize, to housekeepers to use a food that contains a corrosive poison. This is a predicament in which it is not possible our grocers will care to place themselves when they come to think seriously of the matter.

It must be borne in mind that every one of these gift or prize baking powers, are alum baking powders. These powders cost less than four cents a pound to produce: the gift or prize costs but a few cents more. They are sold at the price of a first-class baking powder, so that the swindle, in a commercial sense, is enormous. But the chief iniquity of the business consists in selling, as presumably wholesome, an article of positively injurious character, and by means of gifts or bribes inducing servants or unsuspecting housekeepers to purchase and use it in our daily food.

There should be some prompt method of reaching these dangerous practices and punishing the parties engaged in their promotion. If the present laws are not ample, we commend the matter to the consideration of our State Board of Health for recommendation of such additional legislation as shall be effective for the protection of the public.

Gamblers' Superstitions.

BETTING ONLY WHEN THE OMENS ARE GOOD—BANKING ON THE ADVICE OF A FORTUNE TELLER AND WINNING.

"No, I'm not betting to-day," was the reply of a sporting man, in answer to an inquiry from another of his ilk whether he had bought any pools on the races.

"Busted?" was the laconic query.

"No but I laced one of my shoes up wrong this morning. It's a bad sign. I'll let 'em alone to-day."

"Are you superstitious?"

"I frankly confess that I am," he replied, as he lit a cigar, "and I don't know of a sporting man or gambler that is not superstitious, and, furthermore, I do not believe there is a human being living who is not. Of course, some are more than others, but take gamblers and horsemen as a class, and you will find that each one has his own peculiar quilp. Now this morning I laced my shoe up wrong. If I had left it that way it would have been a lucky day for me, but I did not I unlaced it, and I'll bet two to one if I bought a pool on a horse he would break his neck before he came under the string."

"That's quite interesting. Would you mind giving me some of your experiences? What do you consider a lucky omen?"

"You want to know what I call a lucky omen, eh? That's just as the idea strikes me. When I was in New York last summer I used to count white horses. Say I would be standing at the corner of Fulton street and Broadway. I would take out my watch—when I had one—and time myself and count the number of white horses that turned from Broadway into Fulton street in five minutes' time. I sometimes would go on the odd numbers, and sometimes on the even. Like this: If I made up my mind on even horses and an even number went by during the five minutes, then I would be lucky and visa versa."

"I have heard of gamblers visiting fortune tellers for tips. Do you ever visit them?"

"Many a time, sir. Here's one instance: I am a red-hot Republican, and was backing Jim Blaine to sheol and gone, when I went one day to see a fortune teller. Says she: 'You have been making foolish bets; go and bet the other way all that you have—all the money you can get or borrow.' I told her I was betting on Blaine, and she said 'Wait.' Then went into another room and came out in about a minute. 'Cleveland will be elected as sure as you sit in that chair, but he will never serve his term out.' That was a paralyzer, but I took stock in it, for she never fooled me in her life. I hedged and bet on Grover, all on her account, and made $2000 clear above my hedge and of Kelly the bookmaker.

"Here's another instance from the same woman: I had been playing in hard luck till I only had $12 left. I went to her and told her how I was fixed, and that I wanted a tip on the races. She told me to read the names of the horses to her. I did so, and when I got through the list she said, 'Tilford is the only one I am sure of; bet your money on Tilford.' I went down to the track, and when the horses went to the post there were only four tickets on him. This was a bonanza, you know if he won. I bought one $5 ticket. The track was a regular duck pond, slosh up to the horses' knees. Tilford came in last. Oh, I forgot; he was entered for two races that day. The next race he was in I heard that Mike Daly, who owned him, wanted to scratch him, but the judges wouldn't have it. That wasn't very encouraging, but I stuck to him and put my last fiver on him. His jockey fanned him every jump and brought him in a winner by two lengths. I got $500 odd dollars for my $5 ticket. So much for fortune-tellers' tips. Some fortune-tellers are snide, but take one educated, or that has it naturally born in them, and they get there as a general rule."

"You gamble with cards do you?"

"Oh yes; I make my living as a sporting man."

"Does your superstition affect you in playing cards?"

"Yes, indeed. If I am going to play cards for money I always hunt up a beggar and give him some money for luck. I have walked sometimes two miles to find a beggar, but I don't have to do it here. There is one on every corner. I know a gambler in New York who goes daily to an Italian on Greene street, who has these little canaries who tell fortunes by pulling an envelope out of a pack. He always follows the advice of the bird, and I have actually seen him shed tears over some of the slips he got—not from grief, but from vexation—if it went against his grain."

"Have you ever been at any of the European gambling places?"

"Oh, yes. I was at Monaco."

"How does the thing work there?"

"Oh, the same there as anywhere else. I suppose when you were a boy at school and chose sides for town ball you tossed up for innings by spitting on a stick and calling 'wet or dry' for choice, haven't you?"

"Yes many a time."

"Ha, ha! Well one evening I did the same thing at Monaco. I threw up a stick and called 'dry,' and dry it was I went and played roulette. I quit 20,000 francs winner at midnight. I have had gamblers tell me that they acquired the habit of trying their luck in different ways, but I claim it's not a habit—it's nature, born in a man, and it never comes out. Why, I know dozens of people who laugh at superstition, that will have a regular case of the dumps if they see the new moon over their right shoulders for the first time. They think if they see it over their left shoulders and made a wish they will get their wish."

J. H. Mercer wishes to make an assertion, which he can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. He claims for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantees for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism, Syphillis, and all blood disorders, it frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear Ask him about it.

The Antique in Washington.

Washington is an excellent market for old mahogany furniture, brasses, eight-day clocks, rare silver and China. The surrounding country has been pretty well scoured for it, but in the remote parts of Virginia are still mines of wealth for the collector of antique. These articles are usually bought very cheap by the gatherers of antique bric-a-brac and in most cases are in a dilapidated condition, but after having passed through the hands of the cabinetmaker and received a coat of oil or varnish, look nearly as good as new. In the time of the old Virginia colonies it was customary to exchange tobacco for old pieces of English furniture, and any one who possessed a pier table or wine chest considered himself well off.

Mr. Blaine was a great buyer of old furniture and bric-a-brac and secured some of the best specimens offered for sale here.

Senator Logan's house contains many valuable old pieces, and Secretary Whitney's country residence near Washington, is furnished throughout with old mahogany furniture. The foreign Ministers are also great lovers of old china, and brass especially.

Among some of the articles exhibited here are an old mahogany wine chest inlaid in lighter woods; a sideboard nearly two hundred years old, with brass handles on the doors and drawers which can be turned into a desk; a pier table, which also answers the purpose of a table. Besides these there is a very rare old set of India china, the set consisting of one hundred and ten pieces, beautifully hand painted in Chinese scenes. It was bought down in North Carolina, and is said to be one of the oldest and finest of its kind. With a magnifying glass even the window panes in the painted houses may be distinguished. It is valued at $500. This in New York would be considered a moderate price for a set of china, but here it is a big figure. There is also a service of silver one hundred and fifty years old, which is very unique. There is no fine establishments here like those in New York where these antiques are collected. In a few small shops on side streets are found the old carved chairs, the Pekin china plates and dishes, the dingy old brass andirons, and sets of silver that would delight the soul of the connoisseur.

Mustard plants used to be the terror and disgust of the California wheat grower. Now they are a sorce of profit. By ingenious mechanical harvesting both crops are gathered seperately, and the mustard is worth more than the wheat on the same land.

The last month or so of a pigs life has a great influence upon the flesh of the animal. You can put on the frame all through the year, but the flavor is largely determined by the feeding during the latter period of fattening. The same is true of all animals.

SYMPTOMS OF DYSPEPSIA are loss of appetite, rising of food, heartburn, distension of the stomach, headache, bad breath, sleeplessness, low spirits and general prostration. Constipation is a frequent concomitant of dyspepsia, but sometimes it is attended with diarrhœa.

The test of many years and the experience of many thousands and tens of thousands of every age and condition of life has established the fact that no one will remain a dyspeptic who will take the purely vegetable medicine.

PURELY VEGETABLE

TESTIMONIALS.

AN EFFICACIOUS REMEDY. I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for all diseases of the liver, heartburn and dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.—Lewis G. Winder, 1620 Master St., Assistant Postmaster, Philadelphia.

(EDITORIAL.) PRINCETON, N. J.

We wish our readers to know that we have found much benefit from using Simmons Liver Regulator. Our trouble originated and tend-red chronic many years in India, leaves little hope of a perfect cure from anything. But the Regulator has afforded more relief than all else we have tried, We say this without the wish or knowledge of J. H. Zeilin & Co., who prepare it in Philadelphia.
